Thanks chiefly of the legitimate errands of our people on the seas but you will not be missed as to my main thought, the thought that lies beneath these phrases and gives them dignity and weight. It is not of material interest merely that we are thinking. It is, rather, of fundamental human rights, chief of all the right of life itself. I am ininking not only of the rights of Americans to go and come about their proper business by way of the sea but also of something much deeper, much more fundamental than that. I am thinking of those rights of umanity without which there is no civiliration. My theme is of these great principles of compassion and of protection which mankind has cought to throw about human lives, the lives of noncombatants, the lives of men who are peacefully at work keeping the industrial processes of the world quick and vital, the lives of women and children and of those who supply the labor which ministers to their sustemence.

Americans Must Defend Justice.

We are speaking of no selfish iterial rights but of rights which hearts support and whose foundaries that righteous passion for justice upon which all law, all structures allow of finally, of state and of minkind, must rest, as upon the ultimate base of our existence and our liberty. I cannot imagine any man with American principles in his heart hesitating to defend these things.

Holland and Switzerland Armed.

During the present war, Holland and Switzerland have maintained what amounts to an armed neutrality, although it has been confined to land. When war broke out between France and Spain and France and Great Britain, neutrals became alarmed at the dangers with which the maritime rights were threatsned and the empress of Russia undertook to unlie them in defence of their neutral rights. This formed the basis of treaties between Russia, Denmark, Sweden, Holland, Austria and Portugal. They formed a league which, under the name of armed neutrality, undertook to preserve inviolate the maritime rights of neutrals. These declarations were recognized by the treaty of peace between Great Britain and France and were the established law of nations when the United States in 1783 was recognized as independent by the powers of the world.

president Wilson was intending to ask other neutrals to join the United States in armed neutrality, the fact that he already had invited them to join this country in breaking off of diplomatic relations with Germany aroused some speculation as to whether he might not ask neutrals to join with the United States in the latest move, dolland, Norway and Spain, especially with their merchant marine being rapidly destroyed, it was pointed out might consider joining with the United States. The last time the United States was in a state of armed neutrality was during the war between France and England, which ended with the downfall of Napoleon.

It is a Befensive Measure.

Armed neutrality is described by authorities on international law has a military measure for the purpose of defending rights of neutrals against threatened infringements on the part of a beliggerent. It has generally concerned more than one power and the most striking historical instances of armed testralities were those of the northern huropean powers in 1750 and 1800 made to defend the principle of free ships and free goods, adopted by treaty between the Baltic powers and opposed by England.

"If the commercial interests of several nutions," says one authority, "are threatened by unjust or unlawful measures on the part of a beliggerent, which they deem unjust or dangerous, there can be no question of their right to secure their menaced interests by such combinations as seem best calculated to accompiliable that purpose.

"An armed neutrality is, in fact, an alliance of several powers, usually of a defensive character, though this is by no means essential."
